Alicante

Alicante is located in the south-east of the Iberian Peninsula, directly on the Costa Blanca – one of the most beautiful Spanish coasts. The Romans named the city "Lucentum", city of light, and captured the character of this radiant palm-lined city facing the sea, which enjoys an extremely pleasant climate.

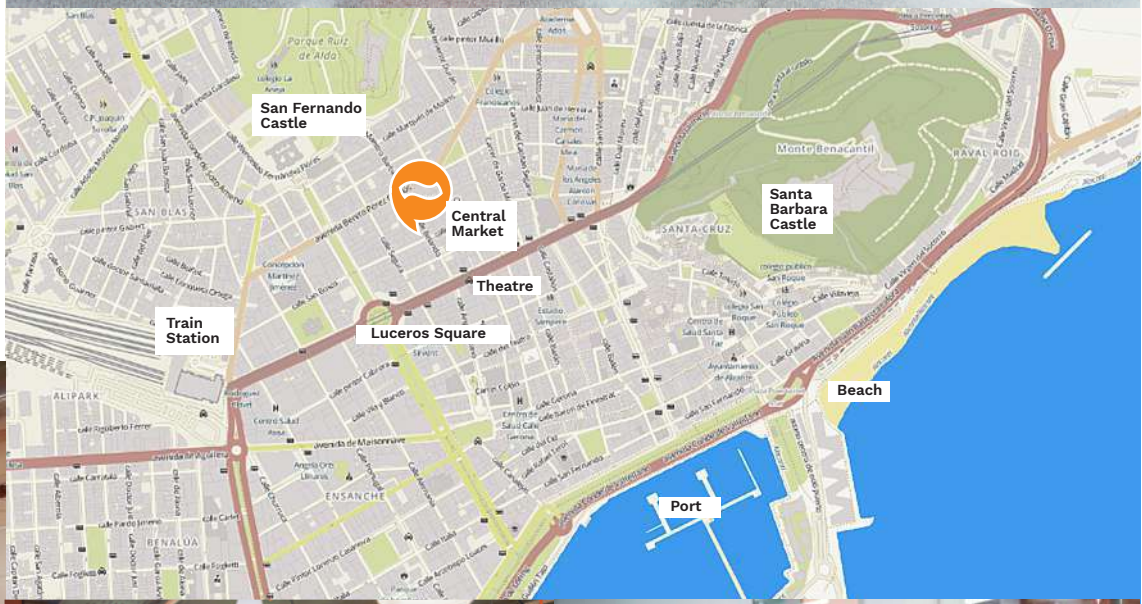

A hectic pace is rare here and the "Siesta" is still taken seriously. People relax among the beautiful boulevards and enjoy a coffee, an Horchata or a Granizado as they stroll around.

Although Alicante is at the heart of tourism on the Costa Blanca it has remained unspoilt by the tourist industry.

Despite its 330.000 inhabitants, Alicante is a town in which almost everything is within walking distance and where acquaintances often cross paths.

Stylish boulevards, the modern yacht port, the picturesque and architecturally interesting old town quarter, modern shopping districts, and the palm-lined sandy beaches provide a lot of variety and remain in the visitor's memories for years to come.

Granada

Granada (population 240.000), situated in the south of Spain in Andalusia, is one of the most beautiful monumental cities, including in its city-centre the most visited monument in Spain, the "Palace of the Alhambra".

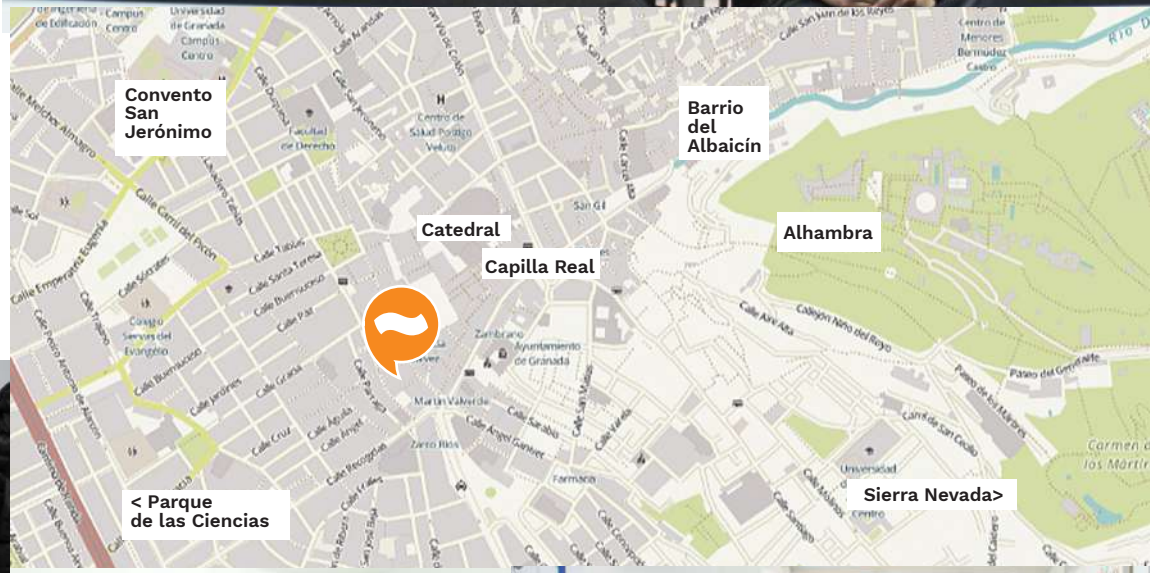

It dates back to the last Arabic reign in the West, whose influence remains all over the city. By visiting Granada you have the chance to experience and breathe the "real Spain" in every corner of the city.

You can enjoy the mountains of Sierra Nevada, situated just 40 kilometres away from the city, particularly for skiing from December to April. Alternatively, you can visit the beach, situated 50 kilometers away, where the sun shines almost all year round, thus boasting its own tropical micro-climate.

Granada is a university city with a pleasant nightlife and an immense number of bars in the old part of the city where you will find a large variety of "tapas" offered free of charge.

Both younger and older people can find the atmosphere that suits them best, given the wide variety of cultural activities that the city offers all year round.

Courses

In order to ensure effective instruction and long term learning success, we apply modern teaching methods that are oriented toward the interests and capabilities of the students. Our teachers are pedagogically - didactically trained native speakers with a broad repertoire of teaching and learning techniques.

The necessary material (grammar, vocabulary, etc.) is taught in a diverse and varied manner.

Theoretical knowledge is applied regularly in practical areas through listening and speaking exercises, conversation exercises, discussions, and role-playing. The programme is rounded off by a selective use of media, which makes the class an unusually "exciting" experience, in which one learns not only how to speak Spanish, but also how to think and feel it.
